

Alumni of the University of Arizona Archaeological Field Schools

Raymond H. Thompson, POP '47

For many years, the Southwestern region of this country has provided practical training in archaeological methods at field schools offering academic credit for structured participation in a research project. The University of Arizona (since 1919; Brace 1986) and the University of New Mexico (since 1929; Joiner 1992) have long dominated this form of practical education, but many other institutions now sponsor field schools.

Byron Cummings established the first University of Arizona (UA) field school when he converted his annual summer exploration of the Navajo Mountain region on the Utah-Arizona border into a credit bearing "Summer Course Among the Cliff Dwellers" (Gifford and Morris 1985:399). He offered this course as a contribution to the first UA Summer School established in 1919 by his friend, UA President Rufus Bernhard von Kleinsmid.

Cummings, who had been taking students into the Navajo Mountain region since 1906 (when he was at the University of Utah), believed that the combination of the awe-inspiring scenery and the spectacular cliff dwellings made an almost spiritual contribution to a student's archaeological field experience (Bostwick 2005:12-13). His successor, Emil Haury, CUM '26, was also impressed by the mystique of the Southwest with its combination of abundant archaeological treasures, incomparable scenery, and merciful isolation from an increasingly urban world (Gifford and Morris 1985:402). Many field school alumni have recorded personal epiphanies as a result of their memorable experiences in that fabled region.

It is the purpose of this essay to provide information on the alumni of the UA archaeological field schools rather than to chronicle the history of those institutions. Carol Gifford [Jelinek], POP '51; Elizabeth Morris, POP '55; and Barbara Mills, GRS '76, have published excellent historical accounts (Gifford and Morris 1985; Mills 2005). Haury, CUM '26, who established the high standards that characterize the UA field schools (Woodbury, POP '47; Haury 1989:xiii), has provided a detailed report on Point of Pines (Haury 1989) and Jefferson Reid and Stephanie Whittlesey, GRS '71, a lengthy account of Grasshopper (Reid and Whittlesey 2005). Relevant data on the twelve UA field schools are presented in Table 5 (below).

list is accurate despite the incomplete nature of some of the early records. I apologize if, for some unfortunate lapse, someone has been left out.

Table 5. Summary of information on University of Arizona Field School Alumni.

Almost 1400 students, undergraduate and graduate, are alumni of those twelve field schools. They are listed alphabetically in Table 6 (after references), along with the institution from which they came, the field school. Although some students enrolled in a field school for more than one year, only the first year is recorded in Table 6. A few students attended more than one field school and that information is included. I have tried to err on the side of inclusiveness and I believe that the

The many staff members of the field schools both contributed significantly to their successes and also had memorable experiences of their own. Neither they, nor the visiting scholars such as Alfred Kidder and Stephan Borhegyi at Point of Pines in 1948, nor special guests such as Lynda Bird Johnson at Grasshopper in 1965 are considered alumni. As students progressed in their academic careers, many advanced to staff positions in the field schools as Dig Foremen or Laboratory Assistants, thereby learning the necessary practicalities to run their own field projects. The linkage of student training with structured research projects has also been highly productive in terms of publication.

Many of the alumni were UA students (about 47%). The rest (about 53%) came from some 215 institutions in all but eight of the fifty states and from thirteen foreign countries (Argentina, Canada, England, France, Germany, India, Iran, Iraq, Mexico, Norway, South Africa, Sweden, and Tonga). Almost a third of the non-UA students came from eleven institutions: Pennsylvania 44, Columbia 29 (including 12 from Barnard), Harvard 26 (including 9 from Radcliffe), Michigan 24, Chicago 22, California at Berkeley 18, Hawai'i 18, New Mexico 18, Cornell 15, Colorado 13, and Yale 11.

Also not included in the field school alumni in Table 6 are the many students the UA has trained in archaeological field schools in the Mediterranean region and those who have participated in faculty research projects, such as Homolovi (Charles Adams), Tabun and La Quina (Arthur Jelinek), Philippines (William Longacre), and Mongolia (John Olsen, GRS '75). A few of these students also attended the Southwestern field schools and are included among the alumni in Table 6.

Women have always been welcomed at UA field schools, although Cummings did not allow women to excavate prior to the Kinishba field school. The gender balance is about equal for all field schools combined, from 1919 to 2015. The ratio for the early years is about 60 percent male to 40 percent female and the reverse after World War II (Table 5). The shift would probably have taken place at Point of Pines if it had not been for the large number of returning male veterans under the GI Bill.

Probably every one of the alumni received a bachelor's degree and an unknown number of them a master's degree (including 205 UA Anthropology MAs). Between 25 and 30 percent of the alumni from 1919 to 1965 went on to professional careers in archaeological-related fields. Although the data are too incomplete for the post-1965 field schools to draw any conclusions, there is enough information to show that the field schools continue to play an important role in the training of archaeologists. More than 200 alumni have earned doctorates at some 30 institutions and served with distinction in universities, museums, government agencies, and cultural resource management firms.

Moreover, most of the alumni also came away from their field school experience as informed citizens fully appreciative of the importance of archaeology in the preservation and interpretation of the past. And we must not overlook the important role the field school plays in enabling a student to realize that the reality of field archaeology may not live up to the romantic lure of archaeology, allowing a prudent and timely career change.

Many alumni have received honors and awards. For example, nine of them (including three women) have been elected to the National Academy of Sciences: Patty Jo Watson (née Anderson), POP '53; Patricia Crown, GRS '75; Emil Haury, CUM '26; Frank Hole, POP '52; Edward Spicer, KIN '32; Waldo Wedel, CUM '29; Fred Wendorf, POP '47; Pauline Weissner, GRS '69; and Gordon Willey, KIN '35. Seven have received the Alfred Vincent Kidder Award for Eminence in American Archaeology: Wendy Ashmore, GRS '75; Jeffrey Dean, POP '60; Charles Di Peso, POP '48; Emil Haury, CUM '26; William Lipe, POP '56; Gordon Willey, KIN '35; and Richard Woodbury, POP '47.

Let us hope that students will continue to have the same unforgettable field school exposure to both the romance and the reality of Southwestern archaeology that the alumni listed here have enjoyed.
